VI-THE WOMAN WHO UNDERSTOOD

There was once a woman who well anderstood and appreciated grand opera She was accustomed to purchase a lib retto weeks ahead, and she played the score through on her piano before she went to a performance. So she always knew what they were singing and when I was over. She had a cousin who did not know an oboe from a bass drum, nor a tenor from a baritone. Nevertheless she enjoyed the opera. One day they were presented to a great tenor. The woman who understood opera spoke to him as follows ;.... "Do you not think the overture to Tambiuser' is a beautiful thing? adore Wagner. Don't you? But T thoughts that the brasses were a little that, and that the eighth bar of your aria in the first scene was a little hurried.

Am I right?" "Very probably," replied the great tenor. "And does your cousin, too,

Very much," said the cousin. " Esnecially since I have learned to distinguish between the kinds." "And how do you do that?" inquired the great touor, with interest.

Then you yourself wear high boots and a long numble in Italian, but low shoes and a short mantle in German."

"What you say is true," remarked the great tenor, "and, more than that, it is interesting. If I had known this before I should have saved myself much confusion. Pray continue.

said the cousin. "In German operathey are differently dressed, but in other kinds they all look alike and put their hands on their hearts all together. That is the safest way to tell." " Henceforth I shall observe the chorus very carefully," said the great tenor.

"You are evidently an adept at this.

I suppose you rarely make a mistake?." " Not often," said the cousin modestly Although some things are perplexing. They wave their arms about much the same in both kinds, and the heroines almost always wear nent bronze shoes. with two straps. Shanghai Declared Infected.

At the meeting of the Sanitary Board held on Thursday afternoon, Mr E. Os borne moved that the Government be asked to apply medical inspection to vessels arri ving from Shanghai. He thought this was a desirable step, having in view the large amount of scarlet fever and other infectious complaints that were now troubling the Shanghai people. Dr Atkinson, President of the Board, said it was necessary for the Board to declare Shanghai infected if medical inspection was to be imposed. Mr Brewin asked if there was any information on the matter, and Dr Clark seconded and added in reply that there was the death returns to go by. The motion was then carried.

deals with the remote effects of tropical life on Europeans. Dr. Anderson is lecturer on tropical medicine at St. Mary's Hospital Medical School, and points out that in hot countries, for example India, the temperature of the body is higher, therespiration slower, the capacity of the chest for air is higher, so that the relative proportion of blood and air in the lungs is altered. The tone of the nervous system is also depressed. When a man, after long residence in India, returns to Europe, he'is less adaptable to the second change of climate. Malaria and its consequences are very detrimental to the health of Europeans in hot countries. Among the consequences are albumenuria and neutalgia. Serious conditions of the nervous system also result from sun or heat strokes, for example, epilepsy, blindness, deafness, and even dementia. In milder cases the patient cannot bear prolonged mental effort and heated, stuffy rooms cause headache, insomnis, irregularity of the heart's action, depression or irritability of temper, Such symptoms often disappear with cool temperature. avoidance of exposure to the sun, or of alcohol and excitement.
